

The Housing Worksheet

Everything Alberta's housing bodies ask for, gathered once, at your own kitchen table. Fill this in at home. Copy from it onto their form.

Read this first. It is not an application, and here is why it exists.

You cannot send this to a housing office. It is not a form, it will not be accepted, and it does not put you on any list. Every housing body in Alberta has its own application. This is what you fill in before you touch theirs.

Here is the reason it matters. Civida in Edmonton gives applicants 48 hours to upload every supporting document once a housing offer arrives. Calgary Housing states it will not accept an application at all without its required documents, and that applications must be renewed every year.

So the paperwork is not the slow part. The paperwork is the part that can lose you a home you waited years for, because it comes due in two days, at whatever moment the offer lands.

Fill this in once, with your papers around you and time to think. Put it in an envelope with the photocopies. When the call comes, you are ready.

Not every body asks every question here. These are the questions Alberta's housing bodies ask, gathered from what they publish. Some will ask less. Very few will ask more.

A The people who will live in the home

List everyone, including yourself. Household size sets the number of bedrooms you qualify for, and Alberta's bedroom rules do not let children over five share with someone of a different gender.

Full legal name	Date of birth	Relationship to you	Citizenship or status

Anyone who arrived in Canada after 2008 may be asked for landing papers. Pregnancy in the household is usually asked about and needs written confirmation of the due date from a doctor or an advocate.

B How to reach you

Current address

Mailing address, if different

Best phone number, daytime

Second phone or message number

Email address

If you have no fixed address, where mail can reach you

Say which number you want used during working hours. Some lists remove people who cannot be reached. If your phone changes, tell every body you have applied to.

C Income — every source, every person over 15

List every source for every household member aged 15 and over. Leaving something out and having it found later is worse than declaring it.

Who	Source of income	Gross monthly amount	Proof you have

Sources they ask about

- ☐ AISH
- ☐ Income Support
- ☐ Self-employment
- ☐ Workers' Compensation
- ☐ Old Age Security or GIS
- ☐ Canada Child Benefit
- ☐ Pension or annuity
- ☐ Student funding
- ☐ ADAP
- ☐ Employment wages
- ☐ Employment Insurance
- ☐ CPP or CPP-Disability
- ☐ Child support or spousal support
- ☐ Canada Disability Benefit
- ☐ Rental income
- ☐ Any other income

Proof takes different forms. Employment: recent pay stubs. Self-employed: three months of sales and expenses. Employment Insurance: a current pay receipt or confirmation of the gross weekly amount. Workers' Compensation: a full month of gross pay stubs. Government payments by direct deposit: a bank statement showing the deposit, or the official payment schedule if it is not deposited.

D Assets

Asked for every household member, and applications commonly ask about assets held outside Canada as well as inside it. Red Deer Housing Authority publishes an asset limit of under $25,000, not counting household furnishings. Limits differ between bodies — ask yours.

Who	Type of asset	Where it is held	Approximate value

--	--	--	--

■ Chequing and savings accounts

■ Term deposits, GICs, bonds

■ RRSPs, RRIFs, TFSAs

■ Property or land, here or elsewhere

■ Business assets

■ Cash on hand

■ Stocks or investments

■ RDSP

■ Vehicles beyond the one you use

■ Money owed to you

E Where you have lived

Applications commonly ask for two to three years of housing history. Write it out now rather than trying to remember at a counter. Alberta bodies also commonly require that you have lived or worked in their area for the past three months.

Address	From (month/year)	To (month/year)	Landlord name and phone

F What you need in a home

Civida's application has a section to complete if any household member requires an accessible home. Fill this in before you sit down at their form, because it is the section people rush.

- ☐ Wheelchair accessible or barrier-free
- ☐ Roll-in or accessible shower
- ☐ Widened doorways
- ☐ Room for a live-in or visiting caregiver
- ☐ Close to transit or medical care
- ☐ Scent-reduced or low-allergen
- ☐ No stairs — ground floor or lift
- ☐ Grab bars
- ☐ Lowered counters or sink
- ☐ Space for equipment or a lift
- ☐ Service animal in the home
- ☐ Other — write it below

In your own words: what you cannot manage in your current home, and what a home would need for you to be safe in it.

G Your health and safety statement

This is the part that carries your score, and nobody will write it for you

Alberta's Social Housing Accommodation Regulation removed its separate scoring lines for degree of accessibility and for accommodation harmful to health in 2022. There is no longer a box on the form that captures disability on its own.

What remains are broader headings, including health and safety risk, scored on reasonable evidence provided by the applicant.

Read that again. Provided by the applicant. Nobody goes looking for it. A need explained out loud at a counter and written nowhere may score nothing.

So write it down, sign it, date it, and attach it to whatever application you submit. One page. Your own words. Use the box below to draft it.

Draft your statement here. Say what your condition does to you day to day, why your current housing is unsafe for you, what you need instead, and ask plainly that it be recorded as a health and safety risk. Name any assessment you have had, with its date.

H Circumstances that change your score

Civida's guide tells applicants to check anything that applies because it may affect eligibility, point score and place on the priority list. Tick anything true for your household and gather the proof.

- ☐ Served notice to vacate, or evicted — keep the notice
- ☐ A child expected by birth or adoption
- ☐ Current home is unsafe or unhealthy for you
- ☐ Current home cannot be made accessible
- ☐ Overcrowded for the household size
- ☐ Paying far more than you can afford in rent
- ☐ Fleeing violence or an unsafe situation
- ☐ Leaving hospital or a care setting with nowhere to go
- ☐ No fixed address
- ☐ A household member has care needs documented with AHS

Some bodies now also collect demographic information, including Indigenous status, following changes to the regulation. You choose what you share.

I Who is allowed to speak for you

This one is missed constantly. A housing body will not discuss your file with a support worker, a family member, a friend, an MLA office or a councillor's office unless you have completed their consent form naming that person. Civida requires a Consent to Release Personal Information form, and notes such a person can discuss the file but cannot change it.

Person I want able to speak for me

Their relationship to me

Their phone number

Their email

Second person, if any

Consent form asked for on (date)

Consent form submitted on (date)

J Your document envelope

Photocopies, in one envelope, ready to go. This is the list that has to survive a 48-hour deadline.

- ☐ Photo ID for every adult
- ☐ Immigration or landing papers, if after 2008
- ☐ Pay stubs or income proof for every earner
- ☐ Proof of assets
- ☐ Birth certificates or ID for children
- ☐ AISH or ADAP statement
- ☐ Bank statements — usually three recent months
- ☐ Proof of three months in the area

- Notice to vacate or eviction notice, if any
- Your signed health and safety statement
- Continuing care assessment date, if you have had one
- Pregnancy confirmation with due date, if applicable
- Medical or occupational therapy documentation
- Separation or custody documents, if relevant

K What to ask, and what to write down

Ask these of every body you apply to, and keep the answers.

Housing body	Applied on (date)	Who I spoke to	Reference number

- Ask for written confirmation your application was received, with the date. If they will not send a letter, write down the name of the person who took it.
- Ask for a stamped or photocopied set of everything you handed over. Files go missing. A stamped copy is the difference between proving you applied and starting again.
- Ask what your application was scored on, and whether the accessibility need was recorded.
- Ask how long you have to produce documents if an offer comes. In Edmonton it is 48 hours. Ask yours and write the answer here.
- Ask whether the application must be renewed, and how often. Calgary requires renewal every year. An expired application is not a waitlist place.
- Ask for their policy on refusing an offered unit, in writing. Most Alberta bodies do not publish one.

Three things that protect you, whatever body you are dealing with

Apply to more than one. These are separate systems with separate lists and no province-wide queue. Waiting on one before starting the next is the most common way people lose a year.

Update them when anything changes. Income, household, address, health. A change can move your score, and a body that cannot reach you may remove you.

If you refuse an unsafe unit, put the reason in writing the same day and ask them to confirm it is recorded as a refusal for reasonable cause. You are allowed to say no. A unit you cannot get into, or cannot be safe in, is not housing.

What this worksheet is drawn from

The questions here are gathered from what Alberta's housing bodies publish about their own applications, as read on 13 September 2026 — including Calgary Housing Company's application and document checklist, Civida's application guide and applicant information, and Red Deer Housing Authority's published eligibility conditions. Scoring categories are from Alberta's Social Housing Accommodation Regulation.

No housing body has approved this worksheet and it is not issued by any of them. It is a preparation tool made by a community campaign.

Requirements differ between bodies and change without notice. Always work from the application your own housing body gives you. If something here does not appear on their form, skip it. If their form asks something not here, tell us and we will add it.

*Filling this in at your own table, in your own time, is not the same as being asked it across a counter while in pain.
That is the whole point of it.*
