

Who Hears Your ADAP Medical Appeal

The current Medical Appeal Panel members — public record

The Alberta Disability System Breakdown · St. Albert, Alberta · August 2026

If your ADAP medical eligibility is denied, or a director refuses to refer you to AISH, that decision can be appealed to the Medical Appeal Panel. These are the people who currently sit on it. This is public information — it is who could be deciding your file.

What this panel does

The Medical Appeal Panel hears medical appeals under the Alberta Disability Assistance Program. If your ADAP application is medically denied, or a director decides not to refer you to the AISH Medical Review Panel, you can appeal that to this panel. One limit we have verified before: a denial by the AISH Medical Review Panel is final and cannot be appealed, but the ADAP medical decision and the refuse-to-refer decision can.

Knowing who is on it is not about naming anyone. It is basic transparency. These are government appointments on the public record, and anyone heading into an appeal is entitled to know who staffs the body deciding it.

Current members

All appointed effective July 2, 2026, with terms running to May 31, 2029, by Ministerial Order, under the Ministry of Assisted Living and Social Services. There are 15 members: a Chair, two Vice-Chairs, and twelve members.

If you are appealing

- You have the right to know the panel that hears you, and to raise a conflict of interest if you have reason to, for example if a panel member has a prior connection to your case.
- Each member has a biography on the public appointees list if you want to look them up.
- Bring your records. The appeal is decided on documentation: dated medical reports, letters, and your own account.
