

Welcome to ADAP

The Alberta Disability Assistance Program (ADAP) provides financial, health and employment supports for eligible Albertans with disabilities.

Receiving ADAP allows you to keep getting financial and health benefits while accessing employment-related supports. These supports help you explore work options, build skills and move toward work.

Getting started

Once you are receiving ADAP, you do not need to apply for employment services. The Ministry will contact you with next steps and connect you with a service provider who will support you as you get started.

Part of receiving your ADAP benefit means participating in employment services based on your individual plan.

You will receive your financial benefits directly from the government.

What happens next?

You will work with a service provider who will support you with your employment goals. They will stay connected with you as you take steps toward work.

Your service provider will help you:

- 1 Define your goals based on what you are ready for
- 2 Create a plan
- 3 Understand your options
- 4 Connect to employment services
- 5 Access other supports
- 6 Support as you make progress

Employment services

Preparing for work and finding the right job can take time. You will receive support based on your goals and needs, which may include:

- Planning and setting goals
- Building skills and confidence
- Exploring work options that match your interests and abilities
- Helping to look, apply and interview for jobs
- Supporting once you start working

Other services

If something is getting in the way of taking part in employment services, other supports may be available. These are based on your needs and may include connection to:

- Practical help, such as transportation and childcare
- Health and wellness supports, including mental health supports
- Assistive devices or workplace related modifications
- Other supports based on your goals and needs

Staying connected

Keep your contact information up to date so your service provider and the Ministry can stay in touch and continue supporting you.

If you miss a call or message, that is okay. Your service provider will try again or leave contact details so you can reconnect when you are able.
