

The Engagement Page Record

Plain Language Edition

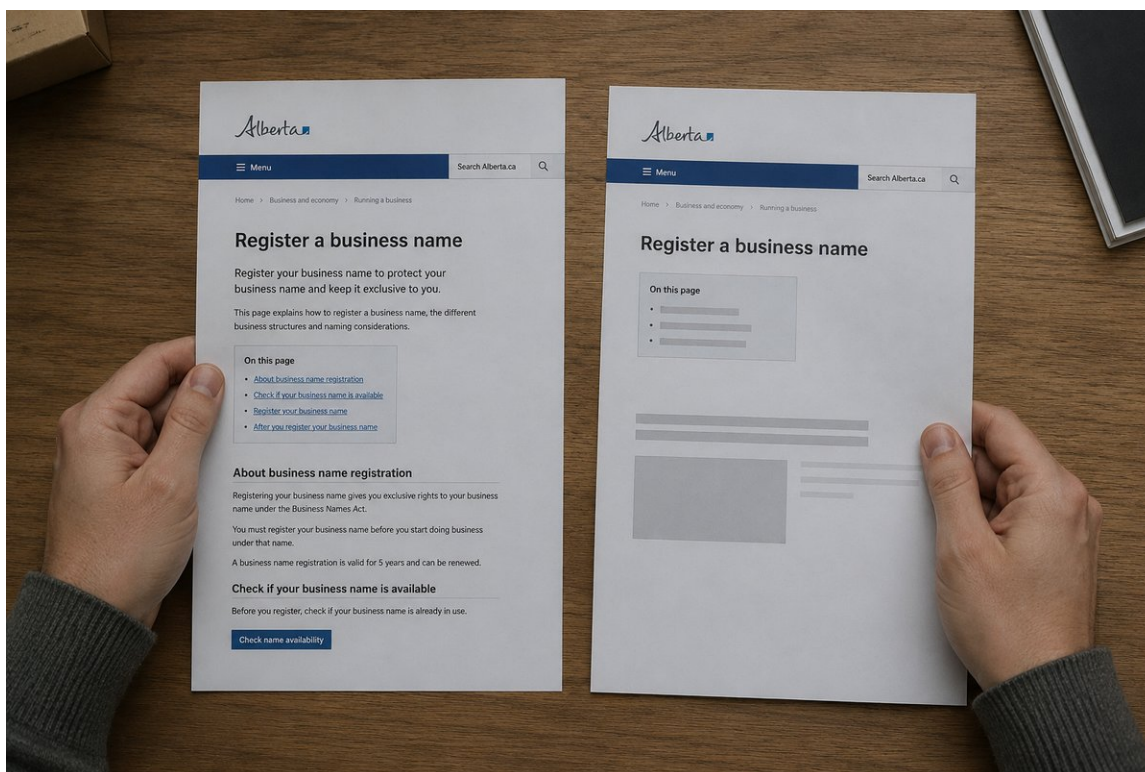

What this is about: The Government of Alberta says it asked people what they thought about ADAP. The page on their website that shows that consultation has been changed many times. We found the changes. This guide explains what they are.

The Alberta Disability System Breakdown — Advocate

St. Albert, Alberta | May 2026

albertadisabilitybreakdown@outlook.com

2. What this document is about

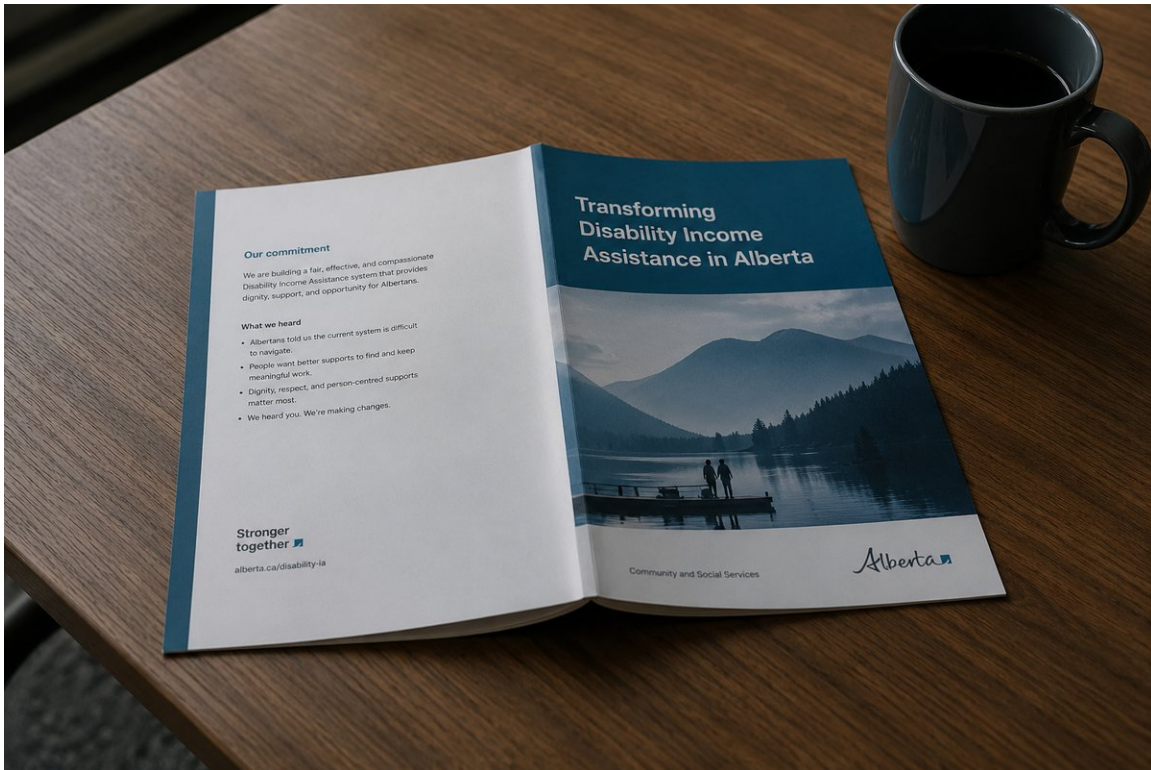

Between August and September of 2025, the Government of Alberta ran a public consultation about a new program for people with disabilities. That program is called the Alberta Disability Assistance Program, or ADAP. It is replacing the way AISH works for many people starting on July 1, 2026.

The government built a webpage to tell people about the consultation. That page is at alberta.ca/alberta-disability-assistance-program-engagement. The page was supposed to show how Albertans could take part. After people gave their feedback, the page was supposed to show what came of it.

We checked that page. Then we looked at older copies of it saved by a tool called the Wayback Machine. The Wayback Machine is run by a library called the Internet Archive. It takes snapshots of webpages so people can see what they looked like in the past.

What we found: The page that exists today is not the page that existed during the consultation. It was changed many times. Some of the changes were small. Some of them were not.

3. The Discussion Guide is real

Before we talk about what changed, we want to be clear about what did not change.

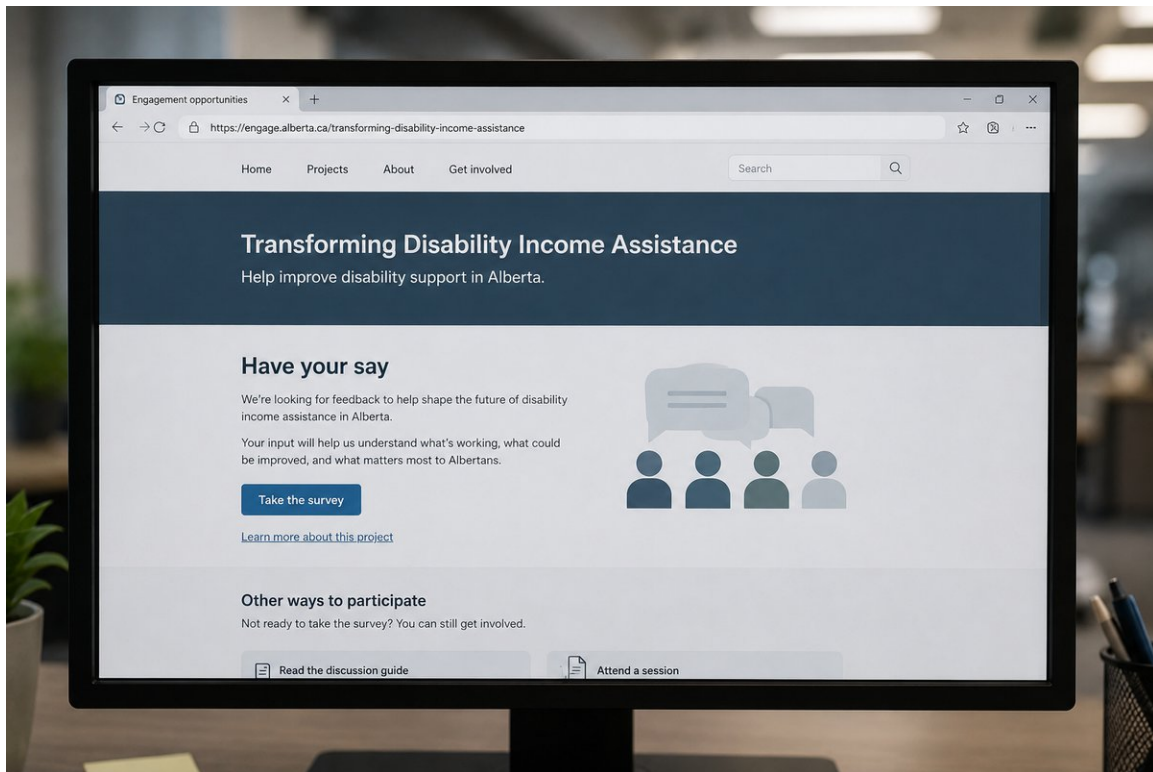

The Government of Alberta released a booklet called the ADAP Discussion Guide on August 13, 2025. That booklet is real. It was made by the Ministry of Assisted Living and Social Services. It was created in a publishing program called Adobe InDesign. The file itself shows when it was made and who made it. We have those records.

There were two versions of the Discussion Guide. One was the regular version, 20 pages long. The other was a large-print version, 25 pages long. Both were made on the same day, about an hour apart. Both are still on the alberta.ca website today.

We are not saying the Discussion Guide is fake. We are not saying the consultation never happened. People did take part. The Discussion Guide tells people exactly what was being asked.

What we are looking at is the webpage on alberta.ca that was supposed to be the front door to the consultation. That page is what got changed.

4. What the page looked like during the consultation

On August 13, 2025, the day the Discussion Guide came out, the engagement page was an active portal. That means it was a place where people could go to take part in the consultation. The page had:

- A button called "Take the survey." When you clicked it, the button took you to the actual survey where you could share your feedback.
- A section called "Get involved" with instructions for different ways to give feedback.
- An email address for written submissions: adapengagement@gov.ab.ca
- A clear deadline: September 12, 2025. That date was on the page for both the survey and written submissions. It matched what the Discussion Guide said.
- The page used words like "We want to hear from you" and "We will be holding engagements." The words were about things that had not happened yet. That is normal for a page asking people to take part.

The Wayback Machine has copies of this version of the page from August 13, August 14, and September 5, 2025. All three copies show the same active portal. The survey deadline on all three is September 12.

5. The rewrite happened in one week

The consultation officially ended on September 12, 2025. The next snapshot of the page in the Wayback Machine is from September 19, 2025 — just seven days later.

By September 19, the page was completely different.

What the page lost in that week

- The "Take the survey" button was gone.
- The whole "Get involved" section was gone.
- The future-tense words ("We want to hear from you") were gone.

What the page gained in that week

- A new section called "Input received" with past-tense words: "Albertans shared feedback..."
- A new statement: "Results are currently under review."
- A new section called "Outcomes" saying feedback "will help shape" the new program.

In plain words: One week after the consultation ended, the page stopped looking like a place to take part. It started looking like a record of what already happened. That is a big change. It happened quickly.

6. The survey date was changed quietly

When we looked at the snapshots side by side, we noticed something specific.

During the consultation, the page said:

"Take part in our survey from August 13 to September 12."

That was on the page on August 13, August 14, and September 5. The Discussion Guide booklet also said September 12. They all matched.

After the consultation, the page said:

"Albertans shared feedback on ADAP through an online survey from August 13 to September 14, 2025."

That was on the page on September 19, and on every snapshot after that. It is still on the page today. The deadline for the survey was changed by two days. We searched for a public announcement about extending the survey. We could not find one.

Maybe the survey really was extended by two days. Maybe the date on the page was changed by mistake. Either way, the page today does not match the page during the consultation, and it does not match the Discussion Guide.

The deadline for written feedback stayed September 12. That part did not change. Only the survey deadline.

7. Then the page didn't change for seven months

From September 19, 2025 until April 12, 2026, the page sat there. Nothing on it changed. That is more than seven months.

During those seven months, a lot of things happened:

- On November 25, 2025, the government brought forward Bill 12 — the law that makes ADAP possible. The page did not mention it.
- On December 9, 2025, Bill 12 passed in the Alberta Legislature. The page did not mention it.
- Throughout the winter, the government was writing the rules for ADAP. The page did not mention it.
- On March 24, 2026, the government announced $250 million for ADAP employment programs. The page did not mention it.

All through this time, the page kept saying "Results are currently under review" — even after Bill 12 had passed and the program had been written into law.

The page also has a section at the bottom called "News." That section was supposed to list news releases about the consultation. Across all seven months, that section listed only two items: the August 13, 2025 announcement of the consultation, and an older announcement from February 4, 2025. Bill 12 passing was never added.

In plain words: The page that was supposed to tell Albertans what was happening with the consultation stopped telling them anything new. For seven months. While the program was being built.

8. They blocked the archive after April 12, 2026

On April 12, 2026, the Wayback Machine took its last snapshot of the page. There are no snapshots after that.

When we looked at the source code of the page today, we found a small instruction inside the code that says:

```
<meta name="robots" content="noarchive">
```

That is a technical instruction. In plain words, it tells programs like the Wayback Machine: "Do not save copies of this page."

The Wayback Machine usually follows that instruction. That is why there are no snapshots after April 12, 2026. The page is being kept out of the public archive on purpose.

We do not know exactly when that instruction was added to the page. What we do know is that on May 12, 2026, the government released the ADAP rules. That release came one month after the archive stopped being able to record what the page looked like.

If the government changes the page after May 12, 2026, we cannot use the Wayback Machine to check what it said before. The page's history is no longer being kept.

9. Why this matters to you

If you are on AISH or in your family is on AISH, this consultation shaped a program that is now changing your benefits.

The Government of Alberta says the new program was built based on what Albertans told them during the consultation. The consultation is the proof. The engagement page on alberta.ca is the place where that proof is supposed to live.

If the page that documents the consultation:

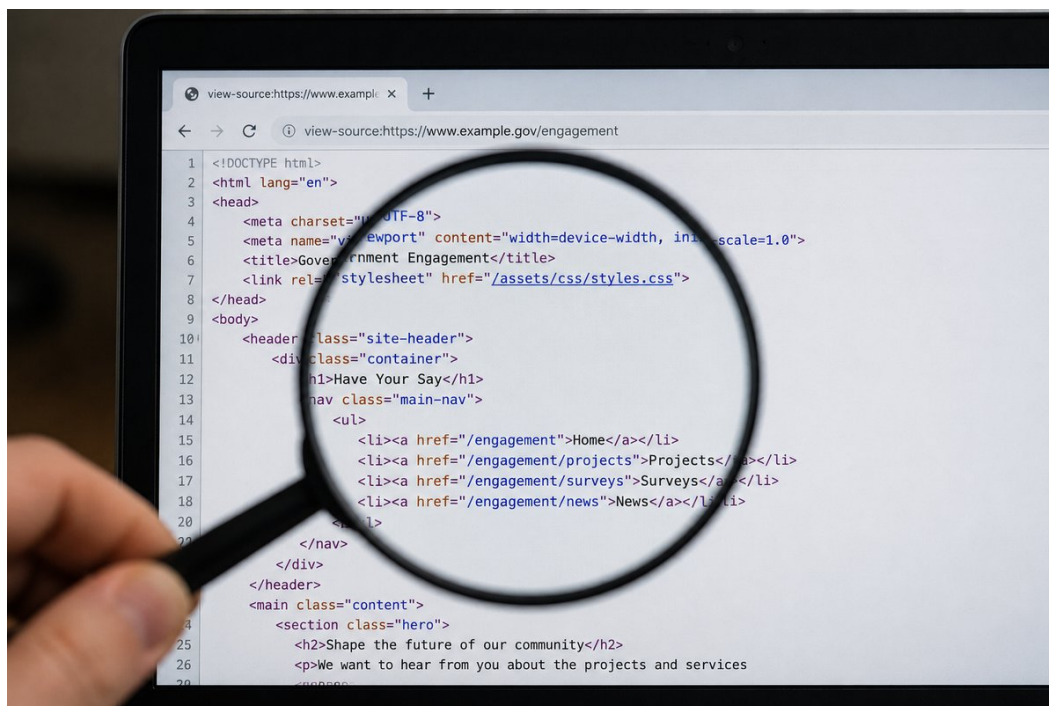

- was rewritten one week after the consultation closed,
- changed the date the survey closed without telling anyone,
- never updated when the law passed,
- never updated when the program rules came out,
- and has been blocked from being archived since April 12, 2026,

— then the page is not really a record of the consultation. It is something the government can change at any time, with no way for the public to see what it used to say.

That matters because the engagement page is what the government will point to when people ask whether the consultation was real, whether it was fair, and whether the changes to AISH actually reflect what people said.

The Discussion Guide is real. The engagement was real. People took part. But the page that today documents all of that is not the same page that existed during the consultation. The record has been changed.

10. How you can check this yourself

You do not have to take our word for any of this. Everything in this guide is something you can check yourself with a regular web browser.

To see the page today

- Go to alberta.ca/alberta-disability-assistance-program-engagement in any web browser.
- Scroll to the bottom and look at the "Last updated" date. It says July 21, 2025. That date is from before the Discussion Guide even came out.
- Look at the "Input received" section. You will see the survey end date listed as September 14, 2025.

To see older versions of the page

- Go to web.archive.org.
- Paste this address into the search bar: alberta.ca/alberta-disability-assistance-program-engagement
- You will see a calendar. Blue dots are snapshots. Click any blue dot to see what the page looked like on that date.
- Compare the August 13, 2025 snapshot to the September 19, 2025 snapshot. You will see for yourself how much the page changed in those six weeks.

To see the Discussion Guide

- The Discussion Guide is still on the Government of Alberta website.
- Search for: Transforming Disability Income Assistance in Alberta Discussion Guide
- Look at page 4. It says the survey runs from August 13 to September 12, 2025.

11. What you can do

If what you have just read concerns you, here are some things you can do.

Share this document

This guide is free to share. You can email it, print it, or post a link to it. The more people who know what is in here, the harder it is for any of it to be quietly changed.

Ask your MLA

Your Member of the Legislative Assembly works for you. You can send them this document and ask them two questions: (1) Why was the engagement page rewritten one week after the consultation ended? (2) Why does the engagement page have a noarchive directive on it?

Document your story

The Alberta Disability System Breakdown campaign collects stories from Albertans about how the AISH-to-ADAP change affects them. If you have a story, there are submission forms you can fill out. Email albertadisabilitybreakdown@outlook.com for a fillable submission form.

Come to the steps

Information about protests, rallies, and public actions about the AISH-to-ADAP change is shared through the Alberta Disability System Breakdown Facebook group. You do not need any qualifications to come. You just need to be there.

12. Sources and closing

Everything in this guide is from public records. The full forensic version of this document, with all the technical details and the links to every snapshot we looked at, is called The Engagement Page Record: A Forensic Timeline. It is available from the Alberta Disability System Breakdown campaign.

Where the records come from

- The Discussion Guide is hosted by the Government of Alberta at alberta.ca.
- Nine snapshots of the engagement page were taken from the Wayback Machine at web.archive.org, covering August 13, 2025 to April 12, 2026.
- The current live page was fetched directly from alberta.ca on May 19 and 20, 2026.
- All technical details (HTML metadata, PDF metadata, capture timestamps) are documented in the forensic version.

The Alberta Disability System Breakdown — Advocate

St. Albert, Alberta | May 2026

albertadisabilitybreakdown@outlook.com

Free to share. Free to use. Free to print.