Before You Fill This In

How community housing rent is worked out, and what's changing. Read this first.

HOW YOUR RENT IS SET

In community housing (rent-geared-to-income housing, like Cívida), rent for most households is based on 30% of your household's total annual income.

This form asks for your most recent Notice of Assessment, the letter the Canada Revenue Agency sends after you file your taxes. Cívida looks at line 15000, your total income. Line 15000 is your income before deductions, so it's usually higher than what lands in your bank account.

WHAT CIVIDA SAYS CHANGED

Cívida's own website says it started a new way of counting income:

- From October 1, 2025 for new tenants and Rent Assistance Benefit clients
- From January 1, 2026 for current tenants, at their next annual review
- Some income that used to be left out is now counted, and the $1,200 a year exemption for households with dependent children was removed

Many people are seeing big jumps in rent at their annual review because of this.

IF LAST YEAR'S TAXES DON'T MATCH YOUR INCOME NOW

Page 3 of the form says: if your Notice of Assessment "is not an accurate representation of your current income," use Table 2 instead. That's the "All Sources of Income" list on pages 4 and 5.

This matters if your income went down, for example if you were moved from AISH to ADAP, lost a job, or a benefit ended. Tick every income source that applies now and attach the documents listed. Then your rent can be based on what you get today, not on last year.

CHECK THESE BEFORE YOU SEND IT

- Tick the right program. If you were moved from AISH to ADAP, say so. Don't tick AISH out of habit.
- Look at line 14500 on your tax return. If there's an amount there, it may be a past housing subsidy (from a T5007 slip). It gets added into line 15000. A member had her benefit recalculated after she asked Cívida about this. If it's on yours, ask Cívida in writing whether it was counted.
- One-time payments. Page 3 asks about one-time payments from the province or Ottawa (like a rebate). Ask Cívida whether they're counted as income or just reported.
- Keep a copy of everything you send, and write down the date you sent it.
- Ask for the math. Cívida's letter may not show how your rent was worked out. You can ask in writing: "Please send me the breakdown of how my rent was calculated, including the income used for each household member."
- Didn't get the form? Ask Cívida in writing to mail or email it to you, so you aren't marked overdue for papers you never received.

WHAT CHANGES JANUARY 1, 2027

New provincial rules for community housing take effect January 1, 2027 (Alberta Regulation 180/2026). In plain words:

- More income can be counted. The Minister can add "any income or any other amount" that isn't on line 15000 when your rent is set. The rule doesn't name any benefit.
- A minimum rent. Rent can't go below a minimum amount the Minister sets.
- An income limit by location. To qualify, your household income has to be under a limit the Minister sets for where you live.
- An asset limit. Your household's assets (savings and things you own) must be $25,000 or less.

As of October 12, 2026, none of those Minister-set amounts had been published, and no order using the new income power had been made.

WHAT IS NOT CONFIRMED

You may have heard that the Canada Child Benefit and the Alberta Child and Family Benefit will start counting toward rent in 2027 or 2028. That has been reported in the news, but it has not been found in any government document, including the ministry's own business plan. Treat it as reported, not confirmed.

IF YOUR RENT LOOKS WRONG

- Ask Civida, in writing, for the breakdown of how it was calculated.
- If your income has dropped since your last tax return, ask them to recalculate using Table 2.
- If your income changes during the year, tell Civida in writing and ask for a recalculation. Don't wait for your next review.
- Send what you get to The Alberta Disability System Breakdown, and we'll help you check it.

This page is not a Civida document. It was added by The Alberta Disability System Breakdown to help tenants fill in Civida's form. Civida's form follows, unchanged, with fillable boxes added.
