Getting Ready for a PDD Intake

The 24 adaptive skills, one page each. A preparation kit for families and individuals

READ THIS FIRST

This is a preparation worksheet, not a government form. PDD staff fill in the official assessment. This kit helps you get ready for that conversation, so the picture they get is complete and nothing important is left out.

Every skill name, description and example in this kit is copied word for word from the government's own document, the PDD Adaptive Skills Inventory, Summary Sheet. It is posted at manuals.alberta.ca/media/fayh2x3c/pdd-adaptive-skills-inventory.pdf. We checked that it was still there, and unchanged, on 17 October 2026.

What PDD is

PDD stands for Persons with Developmental Disabilities. It is the Alberta program that funds supports for adults with a developmental disability, like staffing and day programs. It is not an income program. (The income side for adults is AISH or ADAP.) You can apply at 16, and services start at 18.

How PDD decides who qualifies

The PDD Policy Manual says a person must meet all three of these:

- Childhood onset: the developmental disability was evident before the person's 18th birthday.
- Intellectual capacity: a formal assessment by a registered psychologist shows an IQ of 70 or lower, or shows the person is so limited they cannot complete the test.
- Adaptive skills: the person cannot do 6 or more of the 24 adaptive skills without help from another person, at the level of someone the same age without a disability.

This kit is about the third one. The government's Inventory says it plainly: the individual has a significant limitation in adaptive skills with "six (6) or more," and does not with "five (5) or less."

The most important sentence on the government's form

"Assistance Required: The Individual sometimes requires assistance from another person to be able to perform the activity at a level comparable to a peer without a disability."

"No Assistance Required: The Individual is consistently capable of independently performing the activity at a level comparable to a peer without a disability."

The Inventory also says help can be "physical, gestural, verbal."

What that means in plain words: needing help sometimes counts. Help doesn't have to be hands-on. Pointing, showing, or reminding counts too. And "no help needed" means the person can do it on their own consistently, not just on a good day.

How to use this kit

- Do one skill at a time. Each skill has its own page. You don't have to finish in one sitting.

- Describe the worst day, not the best. Good days are real, but the question is whether help is ever needed. If you only describe good days, the help that's needed won't show up.
- Count the reminders. If you have to remind, prompt, check on, or redo something, that's help. Write it down.
- Write what happens without help. Missed medication, unsafe situations, getting lost, getting taken advantage of. These details matter.
- Add real examples with dates. "Last Tuesday he left the stove on" is stronger than "sometimes forgets the stove."
- Note the papers that back it up. Psychological reports, school plans (IPPs), doctor's letters, occupational therapy reports.
- Use the summary page at the end to see the whole picture and bring it to the intake meeting.

Things to know before the intake

- The IQ test usually has to be recent. The government's Developmental Disabilities Guidelines say the IQ test must have been done within the last 5 years, with some exceptions. Ask the PDD worker if yours counts.
- Bring copies, keep originals. Keep a copy of this kit and everything you hand over, with the date.
- Ask for the decision in writing, with the reasons and how to appeal. PDD has its own appeal form (PDD0021, Notice of Appeal).
- This kit is yours. You decide whether to share it. Don't send it to ADSB. It's for you and the PDD worker.

Two things we noticed in the government's document

1. Under Eating, the government's Inventory prints the same three examples it uses for Food preparation and storage (preparing meals, planning meals, using kitchen tools). We copied them exactly as printed. For Eating, think about the description itself: using utensils or eating aids, and eating safely and in healthy amounts.

2. The PDD Policy Manual names the Inventory, but no page of the manual links to this document anymore. Until at least September 2024 it did. Today the link on that page goes to an address the public can't open. The document itself is still on the government's site, at the address above.
