

If Alberta Separates: What Would Be Lost

A Documentary Analysis of Sovereignty, Foreign Influence, and the Stakes for the Disability Community

INTRODUCTION

This document is not a partisan attack on people who hold sovereignty views, and it is not a prediction. It is a structural risk analysis grounded in publicly documented facts.

The Alberta sovereignty movement has moved from rhetoric to mechanism in the past eighteen months. A citizen-led independence petition has been organized. Meetings between the petition's organizing body and senior officials of a foreign government have been documented. A $500 billion U.S. credit facility has been requested to fund a potentially independent Alberta. The Alberta government has legislated to make the path to a referendum easier. The Premier has refused to condemn the meetings. The personal information of 2.9 million Albertans has been confirmed to have moved from Elections Alberta's voter list to a separatist mobilization organization with documented ties to the U.S. MAGA movement. A formal House of Commons petition (e-7340) is currently before Parliament asking for a Supreme Court reference and a Foreign Influence Transparency Commissioner investigation.

This is not abstract. This is the documented record.

For the disability community, separation is not a distant constitutional question. It is a question about whether the income, healthcare, prescription, and family benefits that disabled Albertans depend on would survive a constitutional reset. This document lays out what is documented, what is at structural risk, and what disabled Albertans should understand before the question is put to them.

SECTION ONE — WHAT IS ACTUALLY ON THE RECORD

The Alberta Prosperity Project (APP) is the organization currently driving the independence petition.

In January 2026, the Financial Times reported that the APP had held three meetings with senior officials of the Trump administration over the previous nine months. The U.S. State Department subsequently confirmed the meetings, stating that "no commitments were made."

The APP has been documented as having sought a $500 billion U.S. credit facility to fund a potentially independent Alberta.

U.S. Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent told the conservative website Real America's Voice that Alberta is "a natural partner for the U.S.," that Albertans are "very independent people," and that there may be a referendum on whether the province stays in Canada.

British Columbia Premier David Eby publicly described the meetings as "treason." Alberta Premier Danielle Smith refused to condemn the APP.

Alberta's Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2025 modified the legal framework for citizen-initiated petitions in a way that the petition currently before Parliament characterizes as "legislating around a court ruling declaring the original petition unconstitutional."

In May 2026, Premier Smith held a press conference titled "Defending Alberta's Critical Infrastructure from Ottawa," in which she invoked Section 92A of the Constitution Act, 1867. Section 92A is the natural resources amendment, granting provinces exclusive jurisdiction over non-renewable resources, forestry, and electrical energy. It is not a defense provision. Defense is exclusively federal under Section 91(7).

In April 2026, Elections Alberta confirmed that the personal information of 2.9 million Albertans — every registered provincial voter, including names, addresses, postal codes, and elector identification numbers — had been improperly distributed from a List of Electors provided to the Republican Party of Alberta to a separatist mobilization organization called The Centurion Project. The Centurion Project was founded by David Parker, who also founded Take Back Alberta — the network that has played a documented role in Premier Smith's rise to power. The Centurion Project has documented ties to the U.S. MAGA movement. On April 30, 2026, the Court of King's Bench granted Elections Alberta a temporary injunction. The RCMP launched a criminal investigation. The Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner of Alberta has begun reviewing the case. Elections Alberta has identified domestic violence survivors, law enforcement personnel, and marginalized communities as among those at significant risk of harm.

NOTE ON SOURCING

These are not partisan claims. They are documented facts on the public record — reported by international media, confirmed by U.S. government officials, and reflected in the text of an active House of Commons petition.

SECTION TWO — WHAT AN INDEPENDENT ALBERTA WOULD ACTUALLY HAVE

An independent Alberta would not have a military.

This is not a matter of policy preference. It is a matter of fact. Alberta has no standing army, no air force, and no navy. The Canadian Armed Forces are exclusively federal. Section 91(7) of the Constitution Act, 1867 grants Parliament — not the provinces — exclusive jurisdiction over "Militia, Military and Naval Service, and Defence."

In the event of separation, Canadian Armed Forces personnel currently stationed in Alberta would not become an Albertan force. Federal military infrastructure would not transfer automatically. Defense agreements such as NATO and NORAD do not extend to non-states.

An independent Alberta would also not, on day one, have a central bank or independent currency infrastructure, diplomatic recognition from any nation, membership in any international organization, independent passport recognition, independent regulatory infrastructure for pharmaceuticals or food safety, access to the Canada Health Act framework, or federal transfer payments funding provincial healthcare and disability infrastructure.

The Premier's "Defending Alberta from Ottawa" rhetoric is doing two things at once: invoking a real provincial jurisdiction (natural resources) while borrowing the emotional weight of military defense language. The framing collapses the moment the actual constitutional section being cited is read.

SECTION THREE — THE PATTERN

Resource-driven foreign coercion is not a hypothetical.

In 2003, the United States invaded Iraq. Stated justifications shifted before, during, and after the invasion. The pattern of resource-rich state, weak military, and strategic interest is on the historical record.

In Venezuela, the United States has applied sustained economic, political, and diplomatic pressure on a resource-rich state. The mechanism does not have to be invasion to constitute coercion.

In Ukraine, the consequence of being a resource-rich state with limited military capacity adjacent to a larger neighbor is currently being demonstrated, in real time, on the global stage.

In Greenland and Panama, the current U.S. administration has explicitly raised the question of territorial acquisition through economic and political pressure.

The current U.S. administration has, in 2024 and 2025, repeatedly raised the question of Canada becoming a U.S. state. This is not a fringe claim and is not invented. It is documented in public statements by the President of the United States.

The structural profile of an independent Alberta — landlocked, oil-rich, militarily defenseless, immediately bordering the country making those statements, holding the world's third-largest proven oil reserves — is not the structural profile of a state that can negotiate from strength.

The petition before Parliament does not claim that the United States will invade. It claims, accurately, that the documented meetings between the APP and Trump administration officials may fall within the mandate of Canada's Foreign Influence Transparency Commissioner. That is a question of due diligence. It is not fearmongering. It is the standard expected of any government before a sovereignty referendum proceeds.

SECTION FOUR — WHAT THE DISABILITY COMMUNITY LOSES

For disabled Albertans, separation is not a constitutional abstraction. It is a direct question about which of the supports they depend on would survive.

The federal Canada Disability Benefit (CDB) — The CDB is a federal program established under the Canada Disability Benefit Act, 2023. It is administered by the Government of Canada and funded from federal tax revenue. It does not extend to non-Canadian jurisdictions. In the event of separation, eligibility ends.

Canada Pension Plan – Disability (CPP-D) — CPP-D is funded through contributions to the federal Canada Pension Plan. Workers who have contributed to CPP and become disabled receive monthly benefits. An independent Alberta would not, on day one, have an equivalent program. Decades of prior contributions would face uncertain treatment in any separation negotiation.

The federal Disability Tax Credit (DTC) — The DTC is a non-refundable federal tax credit used by disabled Canadians and their families to reduce federal income tax. It is also the qualifying gateway for the Canada Disability Benefit and the Registered Disability Savings Plan (RDSP). In the event of separation, eligibility ends. RDSP balances and government grant components face uncertain treatment.

Health Canada drug approvals — Every prescription medication taken in Alberta has been approved through Health Canada's regulatory process. Pharmaceutical companies do not maintain duplicate regulatory submissions. An independent Alberta would need to either build an independent regulatory body or accept regulatory reciprocity from another jurisdiction. In the interim, prescription continuity is a structural question, not an operational one.

Federal transfer payments — A meaningful portion of the funding that supports provincial healthcare, mental health services, addiction services, and disability infrastructure flows through federal transfer payments under the Canada Health Transfer and the Canada Social Transfer. These transfers do not continue to non-Canadian jurisdictions.

The constitutional framework — AISH, PDD, and FSCD all operate within the Canadian constitutional framework, including Section 15 of the Charter (equality rights), Section 7 (life, liberty, security of the person), and the federal-provincial division of powers under Sections 91 and 92. A constitutional reset would, by definition, reset every assumption these programs operate under.

SECTION FIVE — THE TRUST PROBLEM

A separation negotiation is, fundamentally, a question of who is doing the negotiating and what is being negotiated on whose authority.

The Alberta government currently advancing sovereignty rhetoric is the same government that is transitioning approximately 79,290 disabled Albertans from AISH to the Alberta Disability Assistance Program (ADAP) effective July 1, 2026, with announced exemptions that are not yet binding in regulation. It is the same government that has refused to condemn meetings between the Alberta Prosperity Project and Trump administration officials. It is the same government that has legislated changes to the citizen-initiated petition framework that the petition before Parliament characterizes as legislating around an unconstitutional ruling. It is the same political network — through David Parker, who founded both Take Back Alberta and the Centurion Project — that is now connected to the organization under RCMP investigation for allegedly receiving and distributing the personal information of 2.9 million Albertans to a separatist mobilization app.

This is not a partisan claim. It is a question of due diligence: a government that has demonstrated patterns of administrative decisions destabilizing the structures that the most vulnerable Albertans depend on is the same government that would represent Albertans in any separation negotiation.

The breach affects this campaign's audience directly. Elections Alberta identified "marginalized communities" among those at significant risk of harm. Disabled Albertans whose addresses are recorded in voter and program databases — including those in supportive housing, those receiving home care, those in shelters fleeing violence, and those whose disability conditions are connected to specific medical addresses — are part of those marginalized communities. The disability community is not only confronting the income, healthcare, and program risks that a constitutional reset would create. It is also, in 2026, confronting the documented distribution of its physical safety information to a movement with documented ties to U.S. political operatives.

The disability community is not in a position to assume good-faith negotiation on questions that affect every income, healthcare, and prescription program they depend on.

SECTION SIX — WHAT THIS DOCUMENT IS NOT CLAIMING

This document is not claiming that the United States will invade an independent Alberta. It is claiming that the documented pattern, combined with the structural vulnerability profile of an independent Alberta, constitutes a foreseeable risk that any government considering sovereignty has a responsibility to assess in public.

This document is not claiming that all Albertans who hold sovereignty views are foreign agents or bad-faith actors. It is claiming that the meetings between the APP and the Trump administration are documented, that the State Department confirmed those meetings, and that the question of foreign influence is a legitimate question of parliamentary process.

This document is not claiming that sovereignty as a constitutional question is illegitimate. It is claiming that any sovereignty process must be transparent, accountable, and subject to investigation when documented foreign meetings raise legitimate questions.

SECTION SEVEN — WHAT IS BEING ASKED OF PARLIAMENT

House of Commons petition e-7340 is currently active. It calls on Parliament to do two specific things:

- Refer the constitutionality of Alberta's Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2025 to the Supreme Court of Canada under Section 53 of the Supreme Court Act.
- Direct the Foreign Influence Transparency Commissioner to investigate documented meetings between the Alberta Prosperity Project and Trump administration officials.

PETITION E-7340 — OPEN UNTIL JUNE 20, 2026

CLOSING

Sovereignty is a real constitutional question. Albertans are entitled to ask it. They are not, however, entitled to a process in which documented foreign meetings escape scrutiny, in which the consequences for the most vulnerable are not on the table, and in which the question is settled before the public has the information required to answer it.

The disability community has, for the past eighteen months, watched this government make decisions that destabilize the supports it depends on. The campaign has spent that time building a record. The record has a place to land.

The petition is on the record. The meetings are on the record. The structural risks are on the record.

Now the question is on the record too.

Speak up. Speak out. Be heard.
